

Children should start seeing a dentist at 12 months of age. Many family and general dentists do not start seeing children until 3-4 years of age; however, all dental experts and guidelines agree that children should be seen at 12 months of age or when teeth start coming in, and that they need regular fluoride treatments starting then. Often, young children need to see a pediatric dentist who will see very young children. Many pediatricians, including CCP, are also doing fluoride treatments on young children until they start seeing a dentist.

The following dentists are all pediatric specialists and will start seeing children according to the current guidelines.
